Machine learning is the scientific study of algorithms and statistical models that computer systems use to perform a specific task without using explicit instructions, relying on patterns and inference referenced. It is seen as a subset of artificial intelligence.

Object oriented programming system is a programming paradigm based on the concept of objects that contain data and methods. The primary purpose of object oriented programming is to increase the flexibility and maintainability of programs